Dear Nancy:

Joy and I are deeply saddened about your father's death. Alf Landon has been a role model for all Republicans genuinely interested in serving the public with dignity and dedication. He set a very high standard for the rest of us and was our inspiration. All Americans owe a great debt of gratitude to Alf Landon for bearing our standard with grace and purpose.

We share your grief and your deep sense of loss. May you find peace and consolation in your many warm memories of your father.

With our sympathy,

Sincerely,

Howard H. Baker, Jr.

Dear Mrs. Snyder:

Thank you for inviting me to serve as the primary speaker at your unveiling of an historic marker at the birthplace home of Sam J. Ervin on November 8. I am honored that you would think of asking me to pay tribute to the memory of such a close friend and colleague. I have very fond memories of our time together in the U.S. Senate.

Regrettably, I must decline because of the severe limitations on my ability to participate in out-of-Washington events.

Again, thank you for your thoughtfulness. All of you gathered in Sam's honor have my best wishes.

Dear Cass:

Thank you for your kind invitation to visit your congressional district and for forwarding the Burke County Historical Society's invitation for me to speak at the Sam J. Ervin birthplace. I am honored to be offered the opportunity to pay tribute to the memory of such a close friend and colleague. I have many fond memories of our time together in the U.S. Senate during a very difficult period in our Nation's history.

Regrettably, because of the severe limitations on my ability to participate in out-of-Washington events, I will not be able to be with you on November 8. You and all those gathered in Sam's honor have my very best wishes.

Dear Mr. Cosgrove:

Thank you for sending me the information regarding the U.S. Navy Memorial Dedication Weekend. It was very kind of you to think of my interest in the Navy in light of my service during World War II.

The Navy Memorial certainly has been a long time in coming, as you say. It's good to see that it has finally become a permanent part of the Washington scene and a permanent tribute to those who have served America at sea.

Dear Pat:

Thanks for sending me a copy of the Gallup organization study we discussed at lunch a few weeks ago. I have shown it to Tommy, and I look forward to reviewing it myself.

On another matter, I just want to say thank you for all of your help in preparing the remarks for the addresses I have given on behalf of Judge Bork over the last several weeks. You are always responsive to the last-minute demands of my staff and, honestly, you are the only individual who has ever written a speech that I can deliver.

The remarks that you prepared for me for the installation of the Howard Baker Chair at McCallie a couple of weeks ago were simply superb.

Thank you again.

Dear Mr. Gidwitz:

Thank you for your letter of September 3, in which you express misgivings about a prospective U.S.-Soviet treaty on intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF).

Let me assure you that our proposals for an INF agreement are fully consistent with our long-standing, cautious policy on arms control with the Soviets. Our INF policy has been developed as a result of extensive and intensive consultation and discussion both within this government and with the governments of our NATO allies. The Joint Chiefs of Staff, NATO military authorities, and representatives of the Office of the Secretary of Defense have fully participated in every stage of the process. NATO defense ministers have regularly endorsed the U.S. INF negotiating position. It is therefore no surprise that our allies fully support the agreement in principle recently reached by Secretary of State Shultz and Foreign Minister Shevardnadze to eliminate all U.S. and Soviet land-based INF missiles.

The President would not have made these proposals if they weakened our own security or that of our allies -- indeed they do just the opposite. Under the terms of the proposed INF agreement, the Soviets will have to sacrifice almost 1,600 nuclear warheads on INF missiles (SS-20, SS-4, SS-23 and SS-12) in return for some 350 single-warhead U.S. cruise and Pershing missiles.

After an INF agreement, NATO's deterrent, based on an approximate mix of conventional and nuclear weapons, will remain robust. The United States will still have a variety of nuclear systems in Europe, including both ground-based systems and weapons on aircraft which can reach deep into Soviet territory. The Supreme Allied Commander for Europe will have at his disposal additional warheads on submarine-launched ballistic missiles committed to the defense of Europe. Furthermore, at Montebello in 1983, the Alliance committed to modernize those nuclear systems which it will continue to deploy. Finally, the United States continues to station over 300,000 troops in Europe prepared to meet any Soviet aggression, and this in itself remains a major demonstration of the continued coupling of U.S. and European defenses.

This Administration shares your concerns about Soviet compliance with arms control agreements. For that reason, we will not proceed in arms control talks with the Soviet Union on the basis of trust. Rather, we have insisted on strict, effective verification procedures so we can ensure that the Soviet Union is complying with the terms of any agreement.

In our negotiations with the Soviets on INF, we have proposed procedures which will constitute the most extensive and stringent verification regime in the history of arms control. These procedures include inspections to confirm baseline levels of Soviet missiles and support facilities, inspections to verify destruction of these weapons and facilities, and mandatory challenge inspections of suspect sites. Because the Soviets have accepted President Reagan's proposal for global zero, we will have the added measure of verification provided by confirming that Soviet INF missile-producing facilities are destroyed. I am taking the liberty of enclosing an Administration publication providing further detail on our verification proposals.

The prospective INF agreement will be a major achievement for the Western Alliance and another important accomplishment of President Reagan's policies. It will establish new and important standards for verification of arms control agreements. Most importantly, the West will have demonstrated that it can stand firm by resisting Soviet intimidation. Through negotiating from strength, we can achieve equitable agreements which enhance collective security in the West.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Dear Mary:

I'm sorry it's taken me so long to get back in touch with you, but I want you to know how much I appreciated your note. The good news about Joe Davenport is welcome indeed.

I understand your frank feelings about the Iran-Contra hearings. A lot of us who thought -- and still think -- they were necessary to clear the air believe that they actually gave a boost to the President's policy toward Central America and highlighted the threat we face there. This is a situation in which both the Congress and the Executive branch could have cooperated a great deal more and performed a great deal better. There have been plenty of hard lessons for everyone involved, and I think it's no time for vindictiveness. We need to restore the bipartisan consensus that our politics must stop at the water's edge -- no other policy will do in this dangerous world.

Again, thanks for thinking of me. With best regards,

Thanks for the article from The Economist and for the candid -- and correct -- assessment of President Reagan's many achievements in office. One of the real untold stories is the record of accomplishment in revitalizing the U.S. economy.

Dear Mr. Wallace:

Thank you for your recent letter, signed also by your fellow members of the Railroad Commission of Texas, expressing your support for recent actions of the Energy Research Advisory Board at the Department of Energy regarding oil and gas research.

The Administration has taken steps to foster the growth of knowledge that will enable our oil and gas industry to discover and recover more hydrocarbons. This can come about through a better understanding of geosciences and geologic processes, and when linked to applications through petroleum engineering, lead to maximum resource recovery. The Department of Energy has acknowledged that the Energy Research Advisory Board report will be instrumental in shaping the direction of its efforts toward this goal.

I hope you will cooperate with the Department of Energy in its efforts to expand our knowledge about hydrocarbon recovery.
